POLICY REGARDING CONFIDENTIALITY

Statistics in the Community (StatCom) is sensitive to and respects clients' need for confidentiality. However, StatCom consultants are students at the University of Washington and, hence, all StatCom activities are subject to public disclosure laws. Furthermore, StatCom reserves the right to (1) refer to the name of the client organization and (2) discuss the analysis performed for the client organization for the purposes of promoting StatCom to potential clients and members.

StatCom consultants are instructed in procedures for protecting confidentiality, and will protect confidentiality of materials and data provided by the client to the extent permitted by law. Confidentiality of data arising from identifiable living humans is governed by the rules applying to data from human subjects, overseen by the relevant University of Washington Institutional Review Board.
